NEED OF AN EXTRA SESSION

A Western Member Tells Why the Fifty-First Congress Should Be Put to Work.

The Tariff Must Be Revised, and Action Taken on Admission of Territories—Why Some Republicans Oppose an Extra Session.

House Democrats Preparing to Obstruct the Passage of the Senate Tariff Bill.

Surmises as to the Committee Assignments of Ingalls and Carlisle in the Next Congress—General and Personal Gossip.

AN EXTRA SESSION.

A Western Member Presents Reasons for Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—"Nearly all of the opposition I have encountered to the proposition to hold an extra session of the Fifty-first Congress for tariff reform and statehood action upon three or four of the Territories, comes from Republicans, who do not want to be kept here looking after their office-seekers," said a far-Western Republican member, this morning. He continued: "I am extremely anxious for an extra session, either to revise the tariff or to take action upon the Dakota question. If there is not an extra session, there can be no revision of the tariff under eighteen months from to-day. It will take five or six months of the next session before a bill can finally be passed, and the next session will not convene under a year. The manufacturing interests of the country will be very largely affected by this suspense as to what may be done with the tariff. There is some specific feature in the tariff affecting almost every manufacturing interest in the country, and the manufacturers themselves do not know but that when tariff revision comes there may be unfavorable action upon his special industry. Of course the Republicans do not intend to so revise the tariff as to injure in any degree any manufacturing interest, but it is a thing that might possibly be done, and not what is likely to take place, that will cause the manufacturers to go slow until a tariff bill is finally adopted. Then, this Dakota question," continued the member, "is one which demands the most speedy action. The Republican party in its platform at Chicago declared in favor of dividing and admitting as two States the Territory of Dakota. The citizens of that country sent money and speakers into the doubtful States of the East, and did everything they possibly could to bring about Republican success. President-elect Harrison on many occasions referred to the unjust manner in which Dakota has been treated by this administration. The press of the country teemed with allusions to the injustice of keeping Dakota out of the Union. I have no doubt that enough votes were cast for Harrison and Morton in both Indiana and New York to have controlled the election in those States, purely on the Dakota question; that is, I believe that enough mugwumps, Greenbackers and Democrats came over and voted for the Republican candidates, because they believed Dakota had been unjustly treated, to have controlled the election. It was generally understood that an extra session would be called for Dakota's admission as two States, and an extra session, under the circumstances, will be justified. I believe it will be called. As I have said, the only objection I have heard urged against an extra session comes from Republican members, who say that if an extra session is called they will be kept here running around the departments for office-seekers during most of next summer, and they want to avoid that. If an extra session is not called, and inaction is based upon the sentiment of Republicans in Congress, it will be backed by the selfishness of the Republicans in that body. Inasmuch as we shall have control of the two houses, we can adjourn as soon as we pass a tariff bill and set upon the Dakota question."

To-day a "proof copy" of the Congressional Directory of the second session of this Congress was received from the Government Printing office, by Senator Manderson, chairman of the committee on printing. It contains the official list of members-elect of the Fifty-first Congress, and the report indicates just what the Republicans claim as to the political complexion of the House. It gives the Republicans a majority of three. Senator Manderson believes this margin is so close that if there is any important legislation to work upon, President Harrison will be justified in early calling an extraordinary session. What the Republicans very much desire is organization and action as soon as possible, upon partisan questions of great importance.

TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Speculation as to the Senate Bill—House Democrats Will Impede Its Passage.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—"Unless we are confronted with some unseen obstacle, or there is factious opposition to steady progress, we intend to pass the Republican substitute for the Mills tariff bill before we eat our Christmas turkey," said Mr. Aldrich, one of the leading Republican members of the Senate committee on finance this afternoon. "So far," continued Mr. Aldrich, "the Democrats have not shown any organized or individual determination to impede progress toward the completion of the bill. I do not believe they intend to offer any unnecessary resistance. They appear to be disinclined to debate the measure at any considerable length, and appear to be in a rather disorganized condition."

There was considerable talk around the room of the committee on finance, to-day, about the designs of the Democratic members of the House committee on ways and means in relation to the Republican substitute. It was reported, upon the authority of at least one Democratic member of the committee on ways and means, that that committee intends to secure the passage by the House of a bill repealing the tobacco tax, and "correcting some of the incongruities of the present tariff laws." The subject of this bill will, of course, be to suppress the anxiety of the Southerners for an absolute repeal of the tobacco tax, and therefore to piece-hole the Republican bill when it comes over from the Senate. It is believed that a large number of Southern members would be willing to vote for the Republican measure for the purpose of securing a repeal of the tobacco tax. If the House should, before the Senate bill comes over, pass such a measure as is proposed by the committee on ways and means, the Democratic members of that committee believe the Republican bill would receive none of the Southern support, because there would no longer be any excuse for their voting for it on the ground that it is to secure relief on tobacco. The Republican members of the Senate committee on finance say they will readily concede, and they have no doubt the Senate will speedily pass a measure such as the one reported to be in the hands of the committee on ways and means.

Mr. Jarrett, of Pittsburgh, was heard by the finance committee this afternoon on the tariff protection. Mr. Jarrett wanted to have tin-plate protected to the extent of two or two and one-half cents per pound. He said this will enable the producers and manufacturers of the article in this country to invest sufficiently to supply the home demand, and that if this is not done foreign producers will continue to furnish the American market with tin-plate. The hearings by the committee will continue right along until a final vote is ordered on the bill under consideration.

Mr. Bynum, of Indiana, one of the leading Democratic members of the committee on ways and means, said to-day that when the Republican substitute to the Mills bill is received by the House, it will be referred to the committee on ways and means, and that a conference cannot be entered until the committee has examined the measure for the purpose of determining whether they will ask for a conference or recommend concurrence in the amendments. When asked if the majority of the committee would be inclined to report the bill back to the House as that a fair and square vote could be had upon it, Mr. Bynum replied affirmatively: "That is a question I cannot answer." When asked if he believed the bill would be passed by the House, he readily replied: "No, I do not. In the first place, I don't expect to see the bill reach the House before late in January, and
